After a general introduction to the nature and structure of the English language, we study the various components of a language, such as speech sounds (phonetics and phonology), words and their internal structure (morphology), phrases and sentence structure (syntax), meaning of words and sentences (semantics), and meaning of utterances in communication (pragmatics). In addition, we look at the relations between language and society, language and communication, and language and education.

North American Dialectology (Seminar) This seminar consists of a theory-based dialectological part and a descriptive part. First, we will look at the importance of mechanisms and causes of language change, which lead to the formation of new dialects and eventually languages (geographical and sociological aspects are considered especially). The second part will then provide an overview of dialectal variation in the English spoken in North America, i.e. regional (Southern, Northeastern, Midwestern etc) and social (AAE, Chicano English, Youth Speech etc.).
Psycholinguistic Aspects of Second Language Acquisition (Seminar) (coming up)
Sociolinguistics (Seminar) For more than half a century already, sociolinguistics – the study of language in its social context – has been a major field of study within linguistics. In this seminar we take both a theoretical and a hands-on approach to the fundamental issues sociolinguists have been concerned with over the past few decades, including language variation and change, language contact, the relationship between language use and social identity, as well as language planning and language policy. These topics will be examined by means of representative case studies on different varieties of English around the world. In addition, as methodology is important for any kind of empirical research, we will discuss and practice some of the methods for collecting and analyzing sociolinguistic data.

Modulteil: Ü Linguistics: Intermediate PO 08  Lehrformen: Übung  Sprache: Englisch / Deutsch  SWS: 2  ECTS/LP: 2
Zugeordnete Lehrveranstaltungen: Analyzing Variation (Übung)                  Variability is one of the most fundamental properties of language. In this course, we will approach linguistic variation from the perspective of Variationist Sociolinguistics, which studies the way language varies according to external (=social) and internal (=linguistic) factors. After developing a basic understanding of variation, linguistic variables and variationist methods, students will work in small groups on a mini project over the course of the semester. The project will involve compilation of a sufficiently large dataset for analysis of a particular variable, circumscription of the variable context, coding of dependent and independent variables, quantitative analysis, and visual presentation of results. The last sessions will be dedicated to the discussion of the variables examined. Basic Phonetics (Übung)                  This class offers an introduction to the principles of Phonetics and Phonology, including the articulatory basis and feature descriptions of especially the phonemes and allophones that occur in the major varieties of English. There will be a practical focus on both British (RP) and American (GA) standard pronunciations as well on phonological transcriptions both using IPA (an account of the organizational principles of the IPA will be provided as well) and, for students of the "Lehramt", the systems expected in the Bavarian state exams. Critical Stylistics (Übung)                  The course will provide a general overview of stylistics, focusing mainly on contemporary approaches of the main theoretical issues in the discipline (e.g. forensic stylistics, literary stylistics, corpus stylistics etc.). The 'critical' in critical stylistics is founded on discourse analytical approaches used for explaining the impact of texts, taking into consideration the social and political contexts in which texts are produced and read. Furthermore, we will be looking at the different ways in which ideologies are contained in the language we use, e.g. through modality, opposition and transitivity. Another aim of the course is to introduce students to a range of analytical techniques for the critical analysis of texts. To understand the effects within specific historical and socio-political contexts in which those texts were produced is yet another essential part of the class. Discourse Analysis (Übung)                  This course is an introduction to the field of discourse analysis; the analysis of spoken and written language. We will discuss discursive concepts, e.g. cohesion, coherence, discourse markers, gambits, frames, etc.) and will clarify how texts are perceived as connected both on formal and functional grounds. However, we shall not only talk about the theoretical concepts connected to the study of discourse but also learn to analyse and critically assess discourse by drawing on a variety of practical examples and empirical data.

English Historical Linguistics (Übung)

In this class we will trace back the roots of the English language starting with its genealogical origins as an Indo-European and Germanic language, and then describe its development through the major periods of Old, Middle and Early Modern English up to Modern Day English. All the major linguistic levels such as phonetics/phonology, morphology, syntax and lexicon will be investigated by means of the basic methods and principles of Historical Linguistics, but also by analyzing original texts. We will also take into consideration which external influences (e.g. Viking invasions, Norman conquest) both contributed to and caused the specific changes the English language underwent.

English as a Lingua Franca (Übung)

The English language can truly be called a "global language" as it is estimated that a quarter of the world's population is now able to communicate in English at a useful level. Furthermore, it is the most widely utilized language around the planet for international business, diplomacy, advanced education, law, the media, as well as for the dissemination of scientific and technological knowledge. A large proportion of those who use English are speakers of other languages, entailing a situation in which there are more non-native speakers than native speakers. As a result of this reality, in recent years a new approach to studying the use of English in international communication - English as a Lingua Franca (ELF) - has arisen. This course will explore issues related to ELF, including the features and characteristics of ELF use, the role of native speaker and standard language norms, language teaching and learning goals, linguistic stratification, and attitudes towards non-native speaker ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

Phonology (Übung)

The seminar introduces students to basic phonological concepts (as opposed to descriptive phonetics) and describes the major phonological processes occurring in various varieties of English. The analysis is extended to offer a thorough examination of the relationship between phonological rules and representations by looking at various phonological processes in the languages of the world. This will allow us to discover specific phenomena (e.g. rule ordering, absolute neutralization etc.) that will provide us with insight into the general principles of phonological organization. The seminar also covers the representation of phonemes in the form of feature trees and connects phonological with morphological processes via Lexical Phonology.

Research Methods

This is a companion course to the seminar "Language Change" (Claridge, "Theories and Methods", Basismodul). The course introduces Master students of English and American Studies to the most widely applied methods and frameworks in current linguistic research. The course will likewise familiarize students with the basic principles, techniques and tools of linguistic research, necessary to grasp, section and interpret spoken and written discourse on multiple levels.

Syntax (Übung)

This course is designed to expand your knowledge in the field of syntactic analysis and builds on the skills you have acquired in the Introduction to English Linguistics. It is divided into two parts: In the first weeks of the semester, we will recapitulate the central concepts of English syntax (both formal and functional); in the second half, we will apply this knowledge and analyse authentic English sentences. Please note that this course is based on the Comprehensive Grammar of the English Language (CGEL; Quirk et al.).

Zugeordnete Lehrveranstaltungen: City and/as Performance (Proseminar) In this seminar we will take a look at the various ways in which the concept of performance figures in contemporary city texts both in the interaction of the inhabitants of a city with each other and in the representation of the city itself. At the beginning of the semester we will first access the concept of performance from different theoretical points of view in the texts of Judith Butler, Michel de Certeau and others and will then apply those approaches to three contemporary city texts. Our focus will then be on the analysis of the nexus between language, power and action in the various instances of performance in those texts such as the characters' walks through the city, the specific image of the city that is created through the perception of the protagonists and the political implications that might be derived from those performances. Please obtain copies of the following novels: Siri Hustvedt: The Blindfold. Teju Cole: Open City. One further text will be added. ... (weiter siehe Digicampus) Court Room Fiction (BA) (Proseminar) The topic of this course relates to the interdisciplinary field of Law and Literature and deals with the depiction of law in literature and film. We will take a closer look at courtroom novels/fiction as a subgenre of crime fiction and analyze in more detail the (medium-specific) depiction of aspects/concepts such as justice and guilt as well as implications of ethnic and regional backgrounds. We will discuss Harper Lee's To Kill a Mockingbird and David Guterson's Snow Falling on Cedars. Please make sure to acquire a copy of both books and have them prepared for the respective sessions. A detailed syllabus will be provided in the first session.

Film (Proseminar)

Students taking the seminar "Film" in the module EAS-1411 will automatically be allotted to the corresponding Übung "Film Analysis" (Sabrina Mittermeier, Thursdays 5.30 – 7 p.m.). Please be sure to keep this slot free. This seminar wants to introduce students to the medium of film, discussing narrative and genre conventions, as well as how to analyze it academically using the toolbox of film studies. The corresponding Übung will delve deeper into film analysis and both classes will work with a wide variety of examples spanning several decades of American film history, structured according to genres such as drama, comedy, horror or science fiction.

Introduction to Shakespeare (Proseminar)

More than 400 years after his death, William Shakespeare (1564-1616) is still the most-produced playwright in theatres around the globe and his works continue to fascinate a wide audience of theatregoers and readers. Apart from around 39 plays, Shakespeare wrote a cycle of 154 sonnets and several longer narrative poems. It is the aim of this seminar to make students familiar with Shakespeare's work, its major themes and socio-historical contexts. To this end, we will read a selection of his sonnets as well as one example each of the three broad genres of plays Shakespeare's dramatic work has traditionally been divided into, tragedy, comedy and history plays. We will look at these texts both in connection with their genre (what is it that differentiates a comedy from a tragedy? what makes a tragedy tragic? etc.) and in the context of the Early Modern period, specifically its politics and gender relations. Students must obtain their own copies of the plays we will read (to be decided yet ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

PS Travel Literature (Proseminar)

This seminar examines a wide range of travel literature from late medieval times to the present. Based on a discussion of key theoretical approaches to travel writing and debates in postcolonial studies, we will scrutinize how travel accounts (re)produce knowledge and negotiate self/other binaries. We will take into consideration different purposes of traveling (from exploration and conquest to tourism) and mediums of publication (from print to social media). Please obtain copies of Bruce Chatwin's In Patagonia and Noo Saro-Wiwa's Looking for Transwonderland: Travels in Nigeria. All other texts and secondary material will be made available via Digicampus. If you take this seminar in the module EAS-1411, you will automatically be allotted to one of the corresponding Übungen "Narrative Analysis" (Eva Ries, Mondays 11:45 - 13:15 / Dr. David Kerler, Tuesdays 11:45 - 13:15). ... Richardson vs. Fielding: The Rise of the Novel in the 18th Century (Proseminar)

Although the term "novel" defies easy definition and although literary history provides many earlier examples of extended prose fiction, the 18th century is widely regarded the time during which the modern novel came into being and was established as a genre in its own right. In this development, English writers may be said to have led the way, and while Defoe's Robinson Crusoe (1719) is often called the first English novel, it is with the works of Samuel Richardson and Henry Fielding that the novel fully reaches its characteristic combination of realism, individualism, and psychological introspection. Richardson's spectacularly successful epistolary novel Pamela (1740) decidedly shifts the narratorial focus from the events themselves to the heroine's reflections on them, inviting the reader to engage emotionally with her tribulations and character development. Fielding's picaresque and panoramic Joseph Andrews (1742), parodying Pamela and mocking Richardson's pious middle-class ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

American Slavery and Abolitionism (Übung)

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." The Declaration of Independence (1776) not only asserted some basic human rights, but also made it a point to picture the United States as a champion of these rights, whose defense it claimed as the very core of the American Revolution. And yet, in blatant violation of these assertions, slavery persisted in the young American republic and kept growing for almost a hundred years. It was, however, accompanied by increasing opposition. Indeed, the ideals with which the United States credited itself did not entirely fail to have an effect, encouraging as they did the rise of the abolitionist movement, which sought to put an end to slavery. Drama Analysis (Übung)

This course provides students with the basic skills needed for analysing drama. We will discuss and apply the most essential concepts of drama analysis, from ancient and early modern theories of tragedy and the distinction between absolute and epic drama to methods of figure characterisation, the categories of time and space, and contemporary discussions concerning the relation between text and performance. We will work with one full-length play (J. B. Priestley's "An Inspector Calls") and excerpts from various plays from different historical periods and of different genres which will be made available on Digicampus. Drama Analysis is one of the five major areas relevant to literary studies (prose, drama, poetry, film, and literary theory) and is offered once every year.

Literature and Ethics (Übung)

The occupation with ethics is probably as old as philosophy itself, and the debate around the ethics of literature has a similarly long history. There were those like Plato who criticised fiction for being essentially a lie, useless, or, worse, immoral. Against this accusation a longstanding line of defence of the literary argues that fiction has the double function of providing entertainment and being useful—and that one of the uses is specifically setting an example of the good life, of how to live ethically. In the more recent history of literary theory, ethics was relegated to the sidelines of the theoretical debate during much of the 1960s and 70s. It is only since the "ethical turn" of the 1980s that the study of literature and ethics has become prominent in the critical debate again. In this course we will look at different theories from this recent period on how (or whether at all) fiction may be ethical. The aim of the course is to make students familiar with various theoretic ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

Literature and the Natural Sciences (Übung)

This course will use an interdisciplinary way of analyzing literary works with a reference to the natural sciences and the humanities. How do literary narratives engage in science discourses? How does literature include and discuss topics and issues in the fields of medicine, psychiatry, AI and ALife, Cybernetics, Ecology, Animal Studies etc.? What typical features of representing natural sciences can we detect? Can the natural sciences be transported into poetical language? Can literature transform and create knowledge when it comes to the natural sciences? From "mad scientists" to a clear critique of medicalization and a too positive view on technical and post-human developments, literature and the natural sciences function in a reciprocal way. We will read canonized works of American literature as well as newer forms of (science) fiction combining literature and the sciences. Shorter texts will be available on digicampus.

Memory is one of the central topics in literature, film and cultural studies. This course is an introduction to different theories on memory in literature and film. We will deal with basic theoretical texts about collective and individual memory and use these theories in different genres and media, as the focus of this course is primarily on practical approaches. We will discuss the importance of memory for both - the discourse and the narrative level of the literary text, and analyze each session's primary source in in-class exercises and group and plenum discussions.

Metagames: Self-Reflexive Videogames (Übung)

Since circa 2005, an increasing number of self-reflexive video games have been released. These so-called metagames (seen in a line with metafiction, metatheater and metafilm) use metafictional and metaludic means to negotiate the boundaries of their still young genre and criticize rigid conventions in video games. In this seminar, we'll look at this emerging phenomenon and its literary, aesthetic and ludic processes of metaization, such as defamiliarization, metaleptic breaches and design-strategies. Building on the well-known texts on literary metafiction by Patricia Waugh and Linda Hutcheon, this seminar aims at creating a framework for analyzing metagames that will be tested on numerous examples. Example that we may briefly address in preliminary sessions include: The Stanley Parable, Spec Ops: The Line, Nier: Automata, The Bioshock Franchise, The Beginner's Guide, Shadow of the Colossus, Hotline Miami 2, and Metal Gear Solid 2. This course is aimed at understanding and analysing new media practices and developing a broad understanding of social media and its audience.

Reading Life Writing (Übung)

Reading Life Writing Life writing is a burgeoning genre, both in its published forms and as an everyday practice. Critics have called the 1990s and the following decade a period of a 'memoir boom'. Autobiography, memoir, illness narratives, personal essays, diaries, letters, but also blogs and other digital forms are constant reminders of humans as beings that make sense through story, including stories about oneself. Truthfulness, witnessing, confession, justification, and self-expression are as much part of the genre as is selection, omission, or even outright fictionalization. In this Übung, we will systematically look at different forms of life writing and ways of approaching the genre in its multiple forms of narrative self-construction, positioned in specific contexts and directed at particular audiences. Life writing examples and theoretical texts will be part of the course package. Students particularly interested in life writing are encouraged to get a copy of Sidonie Smith's

This term we will focus on English literature of the 20th and 21st centuries, thus including modernist, post-war, postcolonial and postmodernist literature. In this course, participants are expected to read a wide range of textual samples and examples by relevant authors. A reader with poetry, plays and other shorter texts will be made available at the beginning of term. Besides that, students are required to obtain their own copies of the following novels: • Joseph Conrad, The Heart of Darkness: and Other Tales (Oxford World's Classics) • Virginia Woolf, To the Lighthouse (Penguin Modern Classics) • Julian Barnes, A History of the World in 10½ Chapters (1989) It is highly advisable to read at least one of these novels before the beginning of term in order to alleviate the reading load during the semester. The Politics of Modern American Poetry (Vorlesung)

“The relationship between American poetry and American politics is confused and confusing,” writes David Orr in “The Politics of Poetry” (2008). Indeed. Not only is there uncertainty about how and to what extent poetry and politics relate; also, there is a deep-seated ambiguity about what ‘politics’ means in such a context. This lecture course proceeds from an understanding of ‘politics’ as exceeding the framework of political institutions, parties, and programs to include practices and positions that critically or affirmatively negotiate how society is structured, how it functions, who can participate and in what way, and how a future can be imagined. This includes poetic reactions to current events; anti-Vietnam War poetry is just one example of poetic directedness towards the present. But it also includes poetry as a forum of critical reflections of racial and gendered hierarchies, social justice issues, or environmental questions; last but not least, it includes questions of form:

Popular Culture Analysis (Übung)

Coming hot off the heels of the invention of the Internet and supplementary technologies was an explosion in terms of capital entrepreneurialism and audience participation in the form of – Web 2.0. Web 2.0 made its impact with social media and networking sites such as Facebook, Wikipedia, Twitter, Yelp, Digg etc. This course is focused on examining the users of 'New Media' and their practices, and the role user-generated content plays in our rapidly digitizing society. This course is aimed at understanding and analysing new media practices and developing a broad understanding of social media and its audience.

Reading Life Writing (Übung)

Reading Life Writing Life writing is a burgeoning genre, both in its published forms and as an everyday practice. Critics have called the 1990s and the following decade a period of a 'memoir boom'. Autobiography, memoir, illness narratives, personal essays, diaries, letters, but also blogs and other digital forms are constant reminders of humans as beings that make sense through story, including stories about oneself. Truthfulness, witnessing, confession, justification, and self-expression are as much part of the genre as is selection, omission, or even outright fictionalization. In this Übung, we will systematically look at different forms of life writing and ways of approaching the genre in its multiple forms of narrative self-construction, positioned in specific contexts and directed at particular audiences. Life writing examples and theoretical texts will be part of the course package. Students particularly interested in life writing are encouraged to get a copy of Sidonie Smith's ... ### Survey of English Literature IV: 20th/21st Century (Übung)

This survey course is the last of a four-part series covering English literary history from the 16th century to the present. This term we will focus on English literature of the 20th and 21st centuries, thus including modernist, post-war, postcolonial and postmodernist literature. In this course, participants are expected to read a wide range of textual samples and examples by relevant authors. A reader with poetry, plays and other shorter texts will be made available at the beginning of term. Besides that, students are required to obtain their own copies of the following novels: • Joseph Conrad, The Heart of Darkness: and Other Tales (Oxford World's Classics) • Virginia Woolf, To the Lighthouse (Penguin Modern Classics) • Julian Barnes, A History of the World in 10½ Chapters (1989) It is highly advisable to read at least one of these novels before the beginning of term in order to alleviate the reading load during the semester. ### The Politics of Modern American Poetry (Vorlesung)

"The relationship between American poetry and American politics is confused and confusing," writes David Orr in "The Politics of Poetry" (2008). Indeed. Not only is there uncertainty about how and to what extent poetry and politics relate; also, there is a deep-seated ambiguity about what 'politics' means in such a context. This lecture course proceeds from an understanding of 'politics' as exceeding the framework of political institutions, parties, and programs to include practices and positions that critically or affirmatively negotiate how society is structured, how it functions, who can participate and in what way, and how a future can be imagined. This includes poetic reactions to current events; anti-Vietnam War poetry is just one example of poetic directedness towards the present. But it also includes poetry as a forum of critical reflections of racial and gendered hierarchies, social justice issues, or environmental questions; last but not least, it includes questions of form:

Theatre Trip to London 2020 (Übung)

Termin: voraussichtlich Mitte März 2020 Die Exkursion führt Studierende/Theaterinteressierte aus Augsburg in sämtliche Bereiche der englischen Theaterzene ein: National Theatre, das experimentelle Royal Court Theatre (English Stage Company) und kleinere Bühnen werden ebenso besucht wie die Royal Shakespeare Company in Stratford-upon-Avon, das ebenso wie Oxford (Magdalen-College, Ashmolean Museum) im Rahmen ein Ziel einer Tagesfahrt sein wird. Neben den Theaterbesuchen und der Diskussion der dort gesehenen Stücke sollen auch Einblicke in den Performanzaspekt des Dramas gewonnen werden. Wie jedes Jahr wird der Besuch des rekonstruierten Shakespeare Globe-Theaters für die Studierenden nicht nur eine Führung und einen Vortrag, sondern auch einen Workshop mit Schauspielern des Globe Ensembles enthalten. Der Performanzaspekt der Dramas steht darüber hinaus bei einer Backstage-Tour im National Theatre im Vordergrund, während der die Studierenden einen seltenen Blick hinter die Kulissen des Th

Zugeordnete Lehrveranstaltungen: Interpersonal communication (Seminar) E-mail is considered the most widely used cyber-medium in the 21st century. Over the past years, text messaging turned into the preferred form of communication not only among adolescent users. But before people performed long-distance exchanges via the Internet, the letter was the preferred choice for a variety of communicative purposes. Looking at correspondence throughout the centuries, we can see that the letter does not only provide information about its writer but also about the different conventions with regards to, for example, politeness, textual organisation or the linguistic expression of authority and solidarity. In the course of the seminar we will acquire a set of tools, which can be applied to investigate the language of private letters, as well as business and political correspondence. Eventually, we will complement our findings with guidelines published in letter-writing manuals. ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

Defamiliarization in Postmodern and Contemporary American Fiction (Hauptseminar) "And so, what we call art exists in order to give back the sensation of life, in order to make us feel things, in order to make the stone stony. The goal of art is to create the sensation of seeing, and not merely recognizing things; the device of art is the 'ostranenie' of things and the complication of the form, which increases the duration and complexity of perception, as the process of perception is its own end in art and must be prolonged." (Shklovsky, transl. by Berlina) Viktor Shklovsky's concept of ostranenie, which has been translated in a variety of ways, such as defamiliarize, making strange, enstranging, has influenced formalist, structuralist and poststructuralist movements of the 20th century. In this seminar, we will look closely at different theoretical conceptualizations of defamiliarization / estrangement from Russian Formalism to New Formalism. A selection of postmodern and contemporary fictional texts will serve as our basis for analysis. With its focus on (literar ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)
Restoration Comedy (Hauptseminar) The restoration of the monarchy under Charles II (1660-1685) not only replaced Cromwell's Commonwealth and its Puritan ethos, but also led to the re-opening of the theatres that had been previously closed by the Puritans.

Addressing issues of gender, sexuality and marriage, the comedies of that period were highly controversial. They were notorious for their explicit contents, their employment of wit, and their satire of (aristocratic) social manners. In addition, women were allowed to perform on stage, which made the Restoration Comedies a thrilling experience for their (male) audiences. In this course, we will read, among other texts, four major plays that represent the evolution of the genre: William Wycherley's The Country Wife, George Etherege's The Man of Mode, Aphra Behn's The Rover, and William Congreve's The Way of the World. In order to be able to fully understand these plays we shall also explore their socio-historical contexts. Leistungsnachweis: Portfolio oder Seminararbeit ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)
