Modulteil: V Literary Studies: Introduction PO 08 Lehrformen: Vorlesung Sprache: Englisch / Deutsch SWS: 2 ECTS/LP: 5
Zugeordnete Lehrveranstaltungen: Introduction to American Literary Studies (Vorlesung) The course is designed to acquaint students with the terminology, methods, and techniques of literary studies (Part I) by analyzing texts taken from various literary periods and genres (Part II). The course thus offers a first overview of American literary history from the colonial period to the present. BA-students and students of Lehramt Gymnasium are required to attend this lecture in combination with the "Supplementary Course: Introduction to American Literary Studies". Introduction to English Literary Studies This course introduces students to important concepts, genres, terms and methods of analysis in English literary studies. It offers systematic knowledge of genres in literary studies (poetry, drama, narrative), gives an introduction to the diverse theoretical contexts of the study of literature (literary theory), and provides basic information about the historical development of English literature. Furthermore, students will be made familiar with elementary techniques of research and essential study aids in English literary studies. Students are required to attend a supplementary course ("Begleitübung") or tutorial. There are two courses to choose from: Supp. Course (C. Schönberger): Thursday 8.15-9.45 a.m., Tutorial Course (L. Bittner): Tuesday 10-11.30 a.m. All courses start in the second week of term. Watch this space for details (and also additional tasks, information and materials during the term). ... Zugeordnete Lehrveranstaltungen: Dialectology (Seminar) This seminar consists of a theory-based dialectological part and a descriptive part. First, we will look at the importance of mechanisms and causes of language change, which lead to the formation of new dialects and eventually languages (geographical and sociological aspects are considered especially). The second part will then provide an overview of dialectal variation in the English-speaking world, covering the British Isles, North America and the southern hemisphere (Australia, New Zealand, South Africa). Language and Gender (Seminar) This is a compact seminar (Blockseminar) which takes place on three different days. Please make sure you can attend all three continuous sessions. Within media, education and everyday life, questions of gender have gained more and more importance during the last few years. Not only, but also movements like the recent #metoo campaign or political developments towards populist gender criticism have drawn the topic into the public eye. But how can gender be approached linguistically? Do men and women really talk differently? Does it make a difference if men and women are addressed differently and – if so – what effects can be expected by gender neutral language? Which conclusions can be drawn from a queer or intercultural perspective? In this course, we will try to answer these – and other – questions, starting off with a look at general theories of gender and locating gender linguistics within the field of humanities / social sciences. We will touch upon the subject within the frame of di

Neurolinguistics (Seminar)

Neurolinguistics aims to describe the relationship between the brain and linguistic function. You will be introduced to different concepts that aim to describe this relationship. A major part of the seminar will be covered by the study of language and speech disorders like, for example, aphasia (relating to damage in specific brain areas) and dysarthria (relating to nerve damage), as these production impairments demonstrate the connection between linguistic abilities and brain anatomy. We will also look at agnosias as disorders of language reception and perception. In order to examine the exact causes for these disorders you will also be given an overview of modern methods of brain imaging.

Pragmatics (Seminar)

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This seminar constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding practical course (Übung) to complete the module. -- We do not always say what we mean; still we somehow manage to understand each other. The study of pragmatics sheds light on this and other phenomena by looking at the ways we use language and at how our beliefs and intentions affect not only the form but also the interpretation of our utterances. The present course covers the key topics within pragmatics such as implicature, presupposition, deixis, politeness and speech acts as well as newer areas of research (e.g. Relevance Theory and neo-Gricean theories). Students are encouraged to engage in the pragmatic analysis of spoken and written data by applying the acquired theoretical concepts.

Second Language Acquisition (Seminar)

Semantics (Seminar)

INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This seminar constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding practical course (Übung) to complete the module. -- In this course we will recapitulate and broaden our knowledge of semantics as covered in the lecture "Introduction to Linguistics. In doing so, we will focus on two different approaches to the study of meaning in language: classic schools tend to treat semantics as a separate discipline, distinct from e.g. phonology, morphology, or syntax. The categories discussed in traditional semantics include lexical meaning, sentence meaning, and utterance meaning (if pragmatics is considered as overlapping with or as a part of semantics). Cognitive linguistic approaches to semantics, on the other hand, argue in functionalist, rather than in formalist terms. Their claim is that linguistic knowledge is intertwined with other cognitive skills (such as perception, thought, or memory), just as semantics ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

Systemic Functional Linguistics (Seminar)

INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This seminar constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding practical course (Übung) to complete the module. -- The course introduces students to the theory of Systemic Functional Linguistics (developed by Michael Halliday). The approach not only provides explanations of the relation of language resources and context, it also offers explanations for the particular construction of a text and its communicative goal across various types of texts. In this way, the theory proves highly beneficial for all kinds of discourse enquiries, as its method of grammatical analysis enables researchers to, for instance, identify and label specific linguistic patterns that reflect the influence of power and ideologies on language choices. The course, thus, features practical exercises, which complement the theoretical introduction.

Based on a discussion of a range of critical approaches to the study of graphic novels, comics and cartoons, we examine how these mediums can be used to engage with central concepts and debates in postcolonial studies. Our discussion will focus on aspects such as the representation of traumatic histories, experiences of (forced) migration, relationships of power and processes of racialization. Primary texts include Art Spiegelman's Maus, the graphic novel adaptation of Octavia Butler's Kindred, Persepolis by Marjane Satrapi, the journalistic comics The Unwanted and Madaya Mom, as well as a selection of Marvel's Black Panther comics. Shakespeare's Poetry (Proseminar)

The aim of this course is to give a comprehensive introduction to William Shakespeare's poetry. We will approach his poetical works by a close reading of "Venus and Adonis", "The Rape of Lucrece", "A Lover's Complaint", "The Phoenix and the Turtle", as well as of selected sonnets. In order to be able to fully understand these texts, we shall also explore their socio-historical context and key concepts of Renaissance humanism and the Elizabethan era.

The End – and After? Contemporary Post-Apocalyptic Fiction (Proseminar)

Although there have always been texts that imagine the end of the world as we know it, recent years have seen a flurry of novels that thematise the apocalypse. In this seminar we will look at three examples of novels from the English-speaking world that are concerned with the end—and particularly with what comes after, i.e. with life after a disaster that has destroyed or at least fundamentally changed human civilisation. The depiction of life after such a great all-destroying cataclysm raises a number of questions: - In what ways do these texts tackle the reasons for the catastrophe and act, in typical dystopian fashion, as warning and critique? - Which cultural features are associated with the apocalypse? - What are the consequences of surviving the cataclysm? - Why does storytelling continue after the cataclysm? - What is the status of literature after the end of civilisation? The novels we will discuss are: Cormack McCarthy, The Road (2006) Jeanette Winterson, The Stone Gods (2007) ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

The Short Story in the United States and Canada (Proseminar)

This course will disappoint those who believe that short stories are an easy read because they are, after all, what the term indicates: short. In this brevity lies the great art and potential of the genre: short stories are considerably dense and multifold, they often create an intensity of feeling that remains unparalleled even in novels. The short story's potential to move us, to set our thoughts in motion, is a central reason for the genre's popularity and success in the American and Canadian context—and if we want to know more about America's and Canada's evolution as nations, or what it means to belong to those societies, we should turn attention to the "shorts" of Washington Irving, Herman Melville, Louisa May Alcott, Zora Neal Hurston, Ernest Hemingway, Langston Hughes, Joan Didion, Annie Proulx, Margaret Atwood, Alice Munro, Mavis Gallant, Ruth Ozeki, Marvis...—not only as a source of information but, first and foremost, as an invitation to embark on a journey into the unknown, I ... Theatre of the Absurd (Proseminar)

In the 1950s, Europe saw the rise of a new form of drama that irritated traditional theatre critics and audiences and was met with utter incomprehension outside the small avant-garde and experimentalist circles in which it started to develop. Neither being part of a coherent movement nor following a 'manifesto' or underlying theory that would have explained their peculiar aesthetics to a wider audience, these plays were only linked together by the similar ways they frustrated conventional theatre expectations with their lack of closure and finality, absence of plausible characters, presentation of dysfunctional communication, use of tragicomedy as primary dramatic genre, and, above all, the absurdity of the dramatic situation. In his seminal monograph The Theatre of the Absurd (1961), Martin Esslin provided the first and still most influential attempt to subsume these aesthetically similar plays under a thematic Leitmotif when he explained them as theatrical expressions of existentia ... English Lexicology (Seminar)

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This course (Übung) constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding seminar to complete the module. This seminar offers a comprehensive introduction to all relevant aspects of the vocabulary of English. Informed by modern linguistic theory, we will explore the general composition and history of the English lexicon as well as the semantic and morphological structure of lexemes. Questions concerning productivity and the new formation of words as well as issues of polysemy, metaphor and the representation of words in dictionaries will be addressed and, hence, students will be invited to expand and deepen their general understanding of the English vocabulary.

In this course, we will try to answer these – and other – questions, starting off with a look at general theories of gender and locating gender linguistics within the field of humanities / social sciences. We will touch upon the subject within the frame of di

Neurolinguistics aims to describe the relationship between the brain and linguistic function. You will be introduced to different concepts that aim to describe this relationship. A major part of the seminar will be covered by the study of language and speech disorders like, for example, aphasias (relating to damage in specific brain areas) and dysarthrias (relating to nerve damage), as these production impairments demonstrate the connection between linguistic abilities and brain anatomy. We will also look at agnosias as disorders of language reception and perception. In order to examine the exact causes for these disorders you will also be given an overview of modern methods of brain imaging.

Pragmatics (Seminar)

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This seminar constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding practical course (Übung) to complete the module. -- We do not always say what we mean; still we somehow manage to understand each other. The study of pragmatics sheds light on this and other phenomena by looking at the ways we use language and at how our beliefs and intentions affect not only the form but also the interpretation of our utterances. The present course covers the key topics within pragmatics such as implicature, presupposition, deixis, politeness and speech acts as well as newer areas of research (e.g. Relevance Theory and neo-Gricean theories). Students are encouraged to engage in the pragmatic analysis of spoken and written data by applying the acquired theoretical concepts.

Semantics (Seminar)

INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This seminar constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding practical course (Übung) to complete the module. -- In this course we will recapitulate and broaden our Knowledge of semantics as covered in the lecture "Introduction to Linguistics. In doing so, we will focus on two different approaches to the study of meaning in language: classic schools tend to treat semantics as a separate discipline, distinct from e.g. phonology, morphology, or syntax. The categories discussed in traditional semantics include lexical meaning, sentence meaning, and utterance meaning (if pragmatics is considered as overlapping with or as a part of semantics). Cognitive linguistic approaches to semantics, on the other hand, argue in functionalist, rather than in formalist terms. Their claim is that linguistic knowledge is intertwined with other cognitive skills (such as perception, thought, or memory), just as semant

Systemic Functional Linguistics (Seminar)

INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This seminar constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding practical course (Übung) to complete the module. -- The course introduces students to the theory of Systemic Functional Linguistics (developed by Michael Halliday). The approach not only provides explanations of the relation of language resources and context, it also offers explanations for the particular construction of a text and its communicative goal across various types of texts. In this way, the theory proves highly beneficial for all kinds of discourse enquiries, as its method of grammatical analysis enables researchers to, for instance, identify and label specific linguistic patterns that reflect the influence of power and ideologies on language choices. The course, thus, features practical exercises, which complement the theoretical introduction.

PS Sequential Art in Postcolonial Contexts (Proseminar) This course introduces students to the analysis of sequential art as a form of expression which combines textual and visual language. Based on a discussion of a range of critical approaches to the study of graphic novels, comics and cartoons, we examine how these mediums can be used to engage with central concepts and debates in postcolonial studies. Our discussion will focus on aspects such as the representation of traumatic histories, experiences of (forced) migration, relationships of power and processes of racialization. Primary texts include Art Spiegelman's Maus, the graphic novel adaptation of Octavia Butler's Kindred, Persepolis by Marjane Satrapi, the journalistic comics The Unwanted and Madaya Mom, as well as a selection of Marvel's Black Panther comics. Students are expected to have read the following primary sources in preparation for the respective sessions: Art Spiegelman, The Complete Maus (Penguin, 2003 edition) Damian Duffy and John Jennings, Kindred (Abrams, 2016) Mar ... Refugees in Anglophone Prose (Proseminar) According to the UNHCR, 65,5 million people are forcibly displaced worldwide. Of those, 22,5 million are considered to be refugees, another 10 million stateless (http://www.unhcr.org/figures-at-a-glance.html). But who exactly is a refugee? And who is not? What are the differences between stateless and internally displaced persons and refugees? What are their rights? How is 'refugeeness' related to personal identity? What are commonalities between seemingly different groups? Can literature help us gain insight into those questions? In the context of these and other questions, we will look at philosophical and theoretical texts from Hannah Arendt to Seyla Benhabib to Joseph Carens. Politically and legally, we will consider US laws as well as the Geneva Convention and definitions by the UNHCR, always also asking questions of basic human rights and ethical responsibility. Further important aspects will be the distinction of refugee studies from other related fields, while considering simil ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

Shakespeare's Poetry (Proseminar)

The aim of this course is to give a comprehensive introduction to William Shakespeare's poetry. We will approach his poetical works by a close reading of "Venus and Adonis", "The Rape of Lucrece", "A Lover's Complaint", "The Phoenix and the Turtle", as well as of selected sonnets. In order to be able to fully understand these texts, we shall also explore their socio-historical context and key concepts of Renaissance humanism and the Elizabethan era.

The End – and After? Contemporary Post-Apocalyptic Fiction (Proseminar)

Although there have always been texts that imagine the end of the world as we know it, recent years have seen a flurry of novels that thematise the apocalypse. In this seminar we will look at three examples of novels from the English-speaking world that are concerned with the end—and particularly with what comes after, i.e. with life after a disaster that has destroyed or at least fundamentally changed human civilisation. The depiction of life after such a great all-destroying cataclysm raises a number of questions: - In what ways do these texts tackle the reasons for the catastrophe and act, in typical dystopian fashion, as warning and critique? - Which cultural features are associated with the apocalypse? - What are the consequences of surviving the cataclysm? - Why does storytelling continue after the cataclysm? - What is the status of literature after the end of civilisation? The novels we will discuss are: Cormack McCarthy, The Road (2006) Jeanette Winterson, The Stone Gods (2007) ... (weiter siehe Digicampus)

The Short Story in the United States and Canada (Proseminar)

This course will disappoint those who believe that short stories are an easy read because they are, after all, what the term indicates: short. In this brevity lies the great art and potential of the genre: short stories are considerably dense and multifold, they often create an intensity of feeling that remains unparalleled even in novels. The short story's potential to move us, to set our thoughts in motion, is a central reason for the genre's popularity and success in the American and Canadian context—and if we want to know more about America's and Canada's evolution as nations, or what it means to belong to those societies, we should turn attention to the "shorts" of Washington Irving, Herman Melville, Louisa May Alcott, Zora Neal Hurston, Ernest Hemingway, Langston Hughes, Joan Didion, Annie Proulx, Margaret Atwood, Alice Munro, Mavis Gallant, Ruth Ozeki, Marvis...—not only as a source of information but, first and foremost, as an invitation to embark on a journey into the unknown, I ... Theatre of the Absurd (Proseminar)

In the 1950s, Europe saw the rise of a new form of drama that irritated traditional theatre critics and audiences and was met with utter incomprehension outside the small avant-garde and experimentalist circles in which it started to develop. Neither being part of a coherent movement nor following a 'manifesto' or underlying theory that would have explained their peculiar aesthetics to a wider audience, these plays were only linked together by the similar ways they frustrated conventional theatre expectations with their lack of closure and finality, absence of plausible characters, presentation of dysfunctional communication, use of tragicomedy as primary dramatic genre, and, above all, the absurdity of the dramatic situation. In his seminal monograph The Theatre of the Absurd (1961), Martin Esslin provided the first and still most influential attempt to subsume these aesthetically similar plays under a thematic Leitmotif when he explained them as theatrical expressions of existentia ...
