VL Introduction to English Linguistics (Vorlesung) GK Introduction to English Linguistics (Mo 10.00-11.30h) This course provides an introduction to the specifics of language structure and language function. After a general introduction to the nature and structure of the English language, we study the various components of a language, such as speech sounds (phonetics and phonology), words and their internal structure (morphology), phrases and sentence structure (syntax), meaning of words and sentences (semantics), and meaning of utterances in communication (pragmatics). In addition, we look at the relations between language and society, language and communication, and language and education.

Dialectology (Seminar) This seminar consists of a theory-based dialectological part and a descriptive part. First, we will look at the importance of mechanisms and causes of language change, which lead to the formation of new dialects and eventually languages (geographical and sociological aspects are considered especially). The second part will then provide an overview of dialectal variation in the English-speaking world, covering the British Isles, North America and the southern hemisphere (Australia, New Zealand, South Africa).

Informed by modern linguistic theory, we will explore the general composition and history of the English lexicon as well as the semantic and morphological structure of lexemes. Questions concerning productivity and the new formation of words as well as issues of polysemy, metaphor and the representation of words in dictionaries will be addressed and, hence, students will be invited to expand and deepen their general understanding of the English vocabulary.
Language and Gender (Seminar)

This is a compact seminar (Blockseminar) which takes place on three different days. Please make sure you can attend all three continuous sessions. Within media, education and everyday life, questions of gender have gained more and more importance during the last few years. Not only, but also movements like the recent #metoo campaign or political developments towards populist gender criticism have drawn the topic into the public eye. But how can gender be approached linguistically? Do men and women really talk differently? Does it make a difference if men and women are addressed differently and – if so – what effects can be expected by gender neutral language? Which conclusions can be drawn from a queer or intercultural perspective? In this course, we will try to answer these – and other – questions, starting off with a look at general theories of gender and locating gender linguistics within the field of humanities / social sciences. We will touch upon the subject within the frame of di

Neurolinguistics (Seminar)

Neurolinguistics aims to describe the relationship between the brain and linguistic function. You will be introduced to different concepts that aim to describe this relationship. A major part of the seminar will be covered by the study of language and speech disorders like, for example, aphasias (relating to damage in specific brain areas) and dysarthrias (relating to nerve damage), as these production impairments demonstrate the connection between linguistic abilities and brain anatomy. We will also look at agnosias as disorders of language reception and perception. In order to examine the exact causes for these disorders you will also be given an overview of modern methods of brain imaging.

History of English (Vorlesung)

This lecture offers a comprehensive introduction to the history of English from its beginnings right up to the present time and considers possible relationships between linguistic changes and social changes. It discusses the peculiarities of Old English, Middle English, Early Modern English, Late Modern English and Modern English, focussing on their socio-historical backgrounds and textual traditions, and on the changing communicative needs of the speakers (and hearers) of English and Englishes throughout the centuries.

Analyzing Variation (Übung)

Variability is one of the most fundamental properties of language. In this course, we will approach linguistic variation from the perspective of Variationist Sociolinguistics, which studies the way language varies according to external (=social) and internal (=linguistic) factors. After developing a basic understanding of variation, linguistic variables and variationist methods, students will work in small groups on a mini project over the course of the semester. The project will involve compilation of a sufficiently large dataset for analysis of a particular variable, circumscription of the variable context, coding of dependent and independent variables, quantitative analysis, and visual presentation of results. The last sessions will be dedicated to the discussion of the variables examined.

Basic Phonetics A (Übung)

This class offers an introduction to the principles of Phonetics and Phonology, including the articulatory basis and feature descriptions of especially the phonemes and allophones that occur in the major varieties of English. There will be a practical focus on both British (RP) and American (GA) standard pronunciations as well on phonological transcriptions both using IPA (an account of the organizational principles of the IPA will be provided as well) and, for students of the "Lehramt", the systems expected in the Bavarian state exams.

Basic Phonetics B (Übung)

This class offers an introduction to the principles of Phonetics and Phonology, including the articulatory basis and feature descriptions of especially the phonemes and allophones that occur in the major varieties of English. There will be a practical focus on both British (RP) and American (GA) standard pronunciations as well on phonological transcriptions both using IPA (an account of the organizational principles of the IPA will be provided as well) and, for students of the "Lehramt", the systems expected in the Bavarian state exams.

Evidentiality (Übung)

During his presidency, Donald Trump has, on multiple occasions, discredited news networks and –papers, such as CNN, the Washington Post and the New York Times by using the term "Fake News" for reports that have been questioning and often debunking his claims. In times of these "Fake News" debates, society's awareness that truth is a relative construct has heightened immensely. But how can this awareness be expressed in language? How do we refer to our sources and how can we fact-check others? In recent years, evidentiality has emerged as a linguistic field and can help us understand how sources are marked and how our stance towards their verisimilitude is conveyed in discourse. This course aims at providing an insight into the classification and acquisition of sources as well as how they can be classified linguistically. To do this, we will look at different forms of discourse and analyze its source markers as well as look upon the different approaches in dealing with evidentiality

Forms of Address in Context (Übung)

Forms of address are among the most fundamental linguistic means by which speakers construct and negotiate interpersonal relationships. Whether, for instance, English speakers use terms such as 'Sir', 'Mr Carmichael' or 'John' to address an interlocutor named John Carmichael provides valuable information about the speaker, the addressee, the relationship between the two as well as the situational context in which the interaction takes place. The choice of address in a particular context varies considerably across national boundaries as well as across social groups within the same country. This Übung will focus on the range of forms that speakers of English have (and used to have) at their disposal to address their interlocutors. More precisely, we are going to investigate – by means of representative case studies – in how far the speakers' address behaviour (a) has changed throughout the history of English, (b) varies across different varieties of English (e.g. AmE vs. BrE) and (c) is

Morphology (Übung)

INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This course (Übung) constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding seminar to complete the module. -- This course offers a thorough introduction to basic phenomena and concepts of morphology (e.g. inflexion, derivation, reduplication, compounding, productivity, etc.) and word formation (clippings, blends, acronyms, conversion, etc.). The following guiding questions will take centre stage in this process: Which structural rules & regularities inform word formation processes? Are words common only in certain contexts, are they used by certain social groups or people? How do cognitive concepts arise from linguistic forms and expressions; what does morphology and word formation reveal about the way we think? How can we apply morphological phenomena (past tense -ed)

to designate specific text types like descriptive, narrative or instructive texts? Note that this course is designed to enable st

Research Methods

This is a companion course to the seminar "On Context and Common Ground" (Theories and Methods). It is meant to introduce Master students of English and American Studies to the most widely applied methods and frameworks in current linguistic research. The course will likewise familiarize students with the basic principles, techniques and tools of linguistic research, necessary to grasp, section and interpret spoken and written discourse on multiple levels.

Syntactic Structures (Übung)

INFORMATION FOR BA STUDENTS: This course (Übung) constitutes a second part option for the "Grammar in Context"-module (EAS-2411), please choose a corresponding seminar to complete the module. -- In this course, students are invited to recapitulate and expand their knowledge in the field of syntactic analysis. Based on the Comprehensive Grammar of the English Language (CGEL; Quirk et al.), a systematic overview of the elementary categories and concepts (formal and functional) of English syntax will be provided and students will be encouraged to practice their skills in various exercises, including the hands-on analyses of authentic English sentences.
